1. Introduction

・ On the occasion of TICAD III, several African heads of state pointed out that now it’d been ten years since the TICAD process started. It needed to be further institutionalized through some concrete monitoring mechanism. High expectations as such for the follow-up activities of the TICAD process were expressed.
・ In the keynote address of then Prime Minister Koizumi at TICAD III, he mentioned that “Japan will move to institutionalize TICAD follow-up systems.” Subsequently, Japanese government has held Ministerial Conferences based upon various specific themes per year, from the perspective of following up the discussions at TICAD III.
・ On the other hand, documents and contributions that had been announced in the TICAD process encompass a broad range and involve a number of stakeholders, and careful follow-up actions are necessary to look at the impact which is made by TICAD process.

2. Significance of Establishment of Follow-up Mechanism

・ To contribute to steady implementation of related initiatives.
・ To be able to discuss openly with not only African states but with relevant countries and organizations about the concept/way of thinking promoted by the TICAD process and its concrete outcomes.
